G. Lyn Hayth,
Chair, Board of Trustees

Dear Friends,

After serving on the Board of Trustees for six years, I was elected chair in December 2023. I am proud to be part of an academic institution that supports our workforce by providing opportunities to expand their knowledge and skills.

I appreciate the hard work of the RHEC staff as they strive to accomplish the goals of the strategic plan, acquire additional state funding, add new member institutions, grow the Foundation, and make necessary renovations to the interior and exterior of our facilities.

I invite you to take a look at the achievements and accomplishments of the Center outlined in the 2024 annual report.

Kay Dunkley
Executive Director

A LOOK AHEAD

RHEC has experienced a successful year and here is a sneak preview of what's to come:

- We will begin implementing the goals and key strategies of the 2024-2027 Strategic Plan.
- The Center will undergo a strategic planning process for the RHEC Foundation.
- RHEC will upgrade our IT infrastructure resulting in a higher power of efficiency of the network.
- Restrooms in the main building will get a fresh new look, the replacement of the fan coils will begin, and facility services will continue with our phased-in approach to interior painting and carpeting.
- The Center will pursue additional parking options necessary to manage our 25% growth in student enrollments.
- RHEC will add a part-time staff to focus on compiling data and statistics that reflect the successes of RHEC and our member institutions.

A big thank you to our stakeholders. We appreciate your support.

CNA AND CCMA TRAINING AT RHEC

CHANGES LIVES

AND FULFILLS A REGIONAL NEED

The Roanoke Higher Education Center (RHEC) and Total Action for Progress (TAP), a community action agency serving the Roanoke Valley and surrounding areas, work hand-in-hand to not only fill the gap for shortages for two in-demand healthcare professions, but to help individuals lead self-sufficient lives. TAP, one of the original members of RHEC, offers certification training programs for the Certified Clinical Medical Assistant (CCMA) and Certified Nurse Assistant (CNA).

Workforce training and education are central to the work of both TAP and RHEC. TAP offers direct services to help individuals and families improve their lives, such as family services, employment, affordable housing, and education programs. TAP This Valley Works regularly hosts a dozen programs each year at RHEC, including CNA and CCMA.

According to Jo Nelson, Director of TAP This Valley Works, holding their educational programs at RHEC has been key to instilling confidence and self-belief in their clients, as many are low income and first-generation students. "TAP deliberately asked to partner in this facility," she explained, "so that our students would be normalized. They would see that they really aren't that different from the college students that are here."

"In addition to having great space and resources in the building," she continued, "partnership really is about eliminating or balancing that playing field, so the students feel like they are equals."

The CNA and CCMA are entry level positions that provide a sustainable wage and can act as a springboard into more specialized positions, such as registered nurse, surgical technician, or nurse practitioner. Beyond being able to make a living wage, earning these certifications gets their clients on a career trajectory because so many of the hospitals will pay for continuing education, Nelson said.

The CNA program at the Roanoke Higher Education Center follows the Board of Nursing guidelines and requires about 140 hours of classroom and clinical training over a seven-week period. Led by Spring Abney, Healthcare Training Coordinator, the course prepares students for careers as direct care providers in nursing homes, home health, assisted living facilities, and more.

According to Abney, certified nurse assistants "don't pass meds; they are caregivers. They go around and do the vital signs. They make sure people are clean and change them — all the activities of daily living."

The CCMA program, on the other hand, trains students in both administrative and clinical skills to work under the direction of a physician in primary care offices, urgent care centers, and specialty clinics. The course takes nine weeks to complete and requires 140 hours of training followed by 120 hours of externship. Following the course, the students become certified through the National Healthcareer Association.

Diana Talmadge, CCMA Instructor and Registered Nurse, tells her students to start looking for positions as soon as the class starts because many will be employed by the time that the class ends, and some employers will even hold jobs for them.

"Carilion hires a lot of my students," she said. "I've had students go to a lot of the private practices in the area," including Blue Ridge Cancer Care and Vistar Eye Center.

Funding for the programs continues to be an issue for many students, but TAP works hard to provide specialized services and "wraparound supports" to make them more likely to succeed. "Every one of our programs has got case management built into it. Every one of our programs looks not just at the client who sits in the classroom, but we take a look at all of the family members and figure out, can the family make it?" Nelson explained.

> "The Higher Ed Center is so easily accessible, and it's a great location. They have a lot of support services. We're going to fill the world with great CNAs!
> – Spring Abney, Healthcare Training Coordinator, TAP

Further, TAP will frequently provide medical equipment, laptops, and scrubs for their clients to ensure they have the tools they need to succeed in their workforce and educational training programs.

Students are diverse in every sense of the word, and graduates have included single mothers, retirees, and refugees who use the CCMA or CNA certification to enter the US healthcare system. Both Abney and Talmadge are proud of their students and are passionate about their work training new CNAs and CCMAs at RHEC.

"The Higher Ed Center is so easily accessible, and it's a great location," said Abney. "They have a lot of support services. We're going to fill the world with great CNAs! If you could see how happy they are when they graduate, and they finally make it!"

Talmadge added, "My students show me over and over again how capable they are and how smart they are. Just because maybe they took a little bit different path than the traditional one, it doesn't mean that they're not worthy of this chance that they are getting to improve their lives."

CAREER & WORKFORCE TRAINING CENTER

GRAND OPENING

FAFSA Fire:
Helping Students Apply for Financial Aid

On January 13, 2024, the Roanoke Higher Education Center (RHEC) hosted FAFSA Fire, a communitywide event featuring financial aid experts from Roanoke region colleges and universities. Representatives from Hollins University, Ferrum College, Radford University, Roanoke College, Virginia Tech, and Virginia Western Community College were on hand give an overview of the financial aid process, answer questions, and review the newly redesigned FAFSA (Free Application for Federal Student Aid).

The RHEC was proud to host this collaborative initiative to help students across the region complete the FAFSA and apply for financial aid," said Dr. Carla L. James, Senior Director of Academic & Student Services.

All in all, 50 families received help with filling out the FAFSA at this event, and 4 scholarships were awarded. The U.S. Department of Education has overhauled the FAFSA application for the first time in 40 years, featuring a more streamlined application process, expanded eligibility for federal student aid, and better user experience.

"Submitting a FAFSA is key for students to receive financial aid for college," said Chad Sartini, Director of Financial Aid, Veteran Affairs, and Records, Virginia Western Community College. "It was great to see financial aid professionals from so many different colleges and universities from the region come together at the RHEC to help students and families complete the form. By all measures the event was a success."

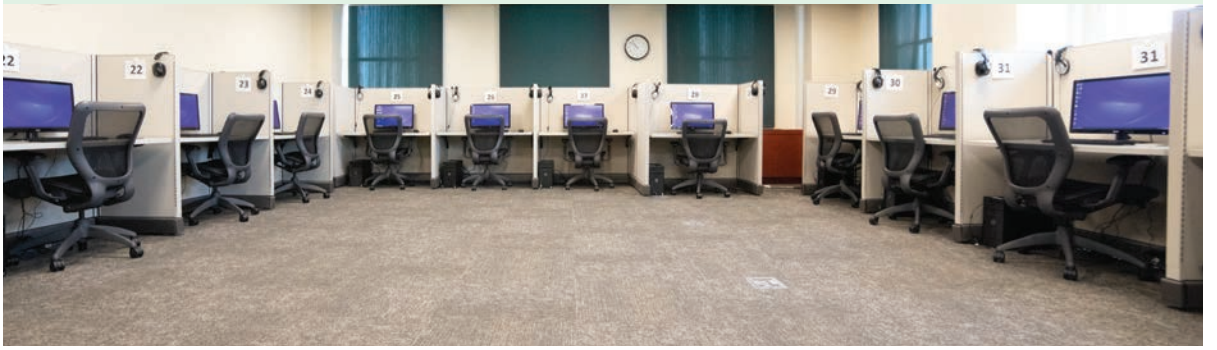

RHEC Completes Major Expansion of Educational Testing Center to Improve Services and Privacy

Over the course of 4 weeks in June, the facilities team at RHEC completed a major expansion and redesign of the Educational Testing Center (ETC). The ETC annually administers more than 3,000 academic, professional licensure, and industry certifications and exams to learners throughout the Roanoke Valley. The renovations provide more space and workstations, improve security and privacy, and expand their ability to administer new private, professional, and licensure exams.

Highlights of the renovation include increasing the number of individual workstations from 22 to 32, as well as creating an additional private room for test takers who require special accommodations. The testing facility now features a larger and more welcoming check-in area, two proctor rooms, server room, office space, exam storage, and secure locker room.

According to Deborah Snellings-Pate, Educational Testing Center Supervisor, test-takers love the new space and feel comfortable there. Her team works hard to provide a high level of customer service and alleviate anxiety surrounding the exams, and the new design allows them to provide learners with even more personal attention, she said.

During FY 2024, 3,000 tests were administered at the Educational Testing Center to learners seeking a GED or industry certification, pre-employment assessment, prior learning exam, or distance education program. The facility is open to students at RHEC member institutions, as well as members of the public, and is nationally certified by the National College Testing Association.

RHEC CELEBRATES THE LIFE AND WORK OF GAINSBORO ARTIST

David A. Ramey, Sr.

The Roanoke Higher Education Center is located in the historic Gainsboro neighborhood of Roanoke, which was also home to the Gainsboro artist David A. Ramey (1939–2017). Over a 40-year period, Ramey created more than 700 colored pencil drawings of the thriving Gainsboro neighborhood as it existed before urban renewal activities altered the community. These scenes depict life in Roanoke neighborhoods, railroad work, religious iconology, and still life from the mid-1940s through the late 1960s.

Illustrations reprinted with permission.

Throughout 2024, RHEC celebrated the life of work of Ramey in multiple ways. On April 28, RHEC joined "A Walk Down Henry Street: Celebrating the Art and Life of David Ramey." This event featured the unveiling of a mural wall in Ramey's honor at the newly renamed David Ramey Gainsboro Garage Lot (60 Centre Ave. NW), located kitty-corner to the Center. There were also performances, special readings, and a "David Ramey Day" Proclamation.

"This has truly been a passion project," said Brian Mann, Executive Enterprise Administrator for the City of Roanoke and director of Park Roanoke. "The intent from the very beginning was to pay honor to Mr. Ramey, bring to remembrance the amazing 'Henry Street,' and to help the Gainsboro neighborhood heal through art."

Additionally, from September 2023-March 2024, the Taubman Museum of Art and the Harrison Museum of African American Culture jointly presented "David Ramey: Gainsboro Road and Beyond," featuring approximately 100 unique works of art and 75 accompanying stories at each museum. To help bring Gainsboro's history to life for this exhibit, the Roanoke Higher Education Center lent its Gainsboro History Project, an online interactive history and walking tour of African American influence in this community.

As one of the exhibition partners, RHEC is currently displaying a selection of Ramey's works. "At the Taubman Museum of Art, we not only strive to provide unique and diverse world-class visual art exhibitions and counterpart educational programming, but we also place a great deal of emphasis on spotlighting local artists and cultural stories," said Cindy Petersen, Executive Director of the Taubman Museum of Art. "These projects often require a deep commitment from the community and support from various partnering organizations. For this exhibition, the Roanoke Higher Education Center turned out to be a vitally important partner, especially in terms of providing support for deep-dive research, fact verification, loan of program materials, and expertly-led walking tours of the Gainsboro neighborhood."

"David Ramey: Gainsboro Road and Beyond was an extremely popular exhibition that drew a diversity of audiences," she added. "Mr. Ramey's work told a story that very much needed to be told, the story of a self-sufficient, thriving, and vibrant community, the residents of which played an important role in our city's history and made contributions that are seen and greatly appreciated even to this day. To ensure that these stories remain in the public eye long after the exhibition has concluded its run at the Museum, we have been proud and honored to help the Roanoke Higher Education Center present a showcase for the David Ramey story to continue to be told to audiences for years to come."

Radford University Expands Nursing Programs at RHEC

After Major Renovation to Address Nursing Shortage

"Nationally, we're in a nursing workforce crisis, such a major shortage," said Wendy Downey, Dean of the College of Nursing at Radford University. "We see that not only in the Commonwealth of Virginia, but also regionally in our local hospitals here in Roanoke. One of the things we decided as a School of Nursing, and now College of Nursing, is that we want to be part of the solution to that workforce crisis."

To meet the demand and accommodate the number of students that Radford University could enroll in nursing, the University recently expanded their space at RHEC by 65% with a major, multi-floor renovation to house their nursing programs. After a fast, two-month renovation to add additional classrooms, labs, and offices in the main building, nursing students began classes there in January 2024. The nursing programs have grown exponentially, with nearly 200 nursing students enrolled in-person at RHEC for the Fall 2024 semester. Radford now has the largest program of any institution in the state that is graduating baccalaureate level students to take their licensure exams, Downey said.

A long-standing partner, Radford University has had a presence at the Center ever since it opened two decades ago. Over the years, RHEC has housed a range of Radford's nursing, education, social work, and continuing education programs, as well as the Radford School of Nursing Clinical Simulation Center on the first floor.

Jeremiah McMillan, Director of Facilities for the Roanoke Higher Education Center, oversaw the renovation for the Center. According to McMillan, Radford and RHEC were in discussions for six to eight months to see if RHEC would be able to accommodate their needs, and fortunately, RHEC did have the space available. Once the project got the green light, things moved quickly.

The team worked with Spectrum Design and Kesler Contracting, who were up to the challenge. By selecting Kesler as the contractor, McMillan was able to vet subcontractors that were available on the spot. Construction began in October. Overall things went smoothly, despite a few hiccups, such as having to switch from vinyl flooring to carpet for the first floor because the order for vinyl flooring would not be delivered in time.

McMillan's maintenance team at RHEC jumped in to ensure the renovation continued on schedule, representing a true team effort. "My staff installed the sinks and all the plumbing for the labs because we couldn't find a plumber that would do it fast enough. And we also installed the kitchen on the eighth floor that was added later to the project," he explained.

> One of the things we decided as a School of Nursing, and now College of Nursing, is that we want to be part of the solution to that workforce crisis.

The construction team finished the day before the actual deadline. Faculty moved from Radford University Carilion (RUC) into the Center in December. The move applied only to graduate and upper-level nursing students at Radford University Carilion.

The new spaces are beautiful, and the classrooms have been designed for nursing and integrated with technology to allow for interactive learning, Downey said.

The multi-floor renovation project includes new clinical skills labs on the first floor, additional office space on the 5th floor, and more classroom space on the 2nd and 6th floors. Radford has a significant portion of the 6th floor, which includes a computer lab and conference room. They also occupy the entire 8th floor, which houses the faculty offices, as well as the Dean's suite for the College of Nursing.

"I can't reiterate enough how well Kay's team really worked with us, through the construction, design, and logistics, making sure that our time parameters were met, and making sure we provided the best things possible for our students," said Glen Mayhew, Associate Dean of Waldron College of Health and Human Services/Assistant Provost for Academic Affairs at Radford University. Mayhew served as the academic representative for Radford University through this entire process.

"I applaud Radford University for responding to the needs of our workforce," added Kay Dunkley, RHEC Executive Director. "The uptick in their enrollments in the areas of healthcare and social work are essential to fulfilling the in-demand jobs in our region."
